The Druid's Call by E.K. Johnston

Name: _____

“After about half an hour, they burst into a sunlit glade. There was a rock wall at the back of it, and cascading down from above was a crystal-clear waterfall. The water fell into a small grotto, which must have been a lot deeper than it looked, because there was no stream or creek running out of it. The grotto was ringed by ice-white boulders flecked with gray spots, and elegant trees provided some shade near the water.” The Druid's Call, p. 140.
